Transport and storage 1971 to 2001

Overall employment in transport and storage in Melbourne declined over the 30 years between 1971-2001. While employment declined in the City of Melbourne, it grew in many middle and outer areas, most strongly in Hume, where there is plentiful land and access to the local and interstate road network. Hume has a strong manufacturing and warehouse base and acts as a national transport, distribution and logistics (TDL) hub, accounting for 23% of Melbourne's TDL employment. Wyndham, Kingston, Monash, Knox and Casey also experienced strong increases in employment in this sector between 1971-2001.

Transport and storage industry workers 1954 and 2001

The decentralisation of transport workers has seen workers move away from central Melbourne. In 1954, Port Melbourne, had the highest share of residents employed in the sector, followed by South Melbourne, Melbourne, Broadmeadows, Keilor and Essendon. By 2001, concentrations were highest in outer areas, with Hume having the highest share.

Wholesale trade 1971 to 2001

Wholesale trade in Melbourne has decentralised alongside transport and storage. Growth in jobs was strongest in outer areas, notably Hume, Whittlesea, Greater Dandenong and Knox. Changes in the areas where wholesale trade employees live reflect movement in job location and employment in these sectors. Jobs in wholesale trade increased 51% between 1971-2001, with growth occurring in the outer areas in response to changing industry needs and demand for larger sites with ready access to the road network.
